

About contributing to Policademy

Policademy is able to run because of our generous contributors.

What does it mean to contribute?

Our guides and practice questions don't come out of thin air. Nor does the training material used to sharpen the acumen of our AI. When contributing, you're providing us with this essential information which helps Policademy become a better, more expansive, and accurate educational tool.

We also leverage graphics and web experiences to make Policademy feel more immersive and engaging. If you're an artsy person, or a frontend programmer, feel free to also contribute.

Policademy does not sell its information or AI services for money. Nor do we accept donations, for we are not a registered 501(c)(3).

Any contributions made are protected under the Creative Commons ShareAlike License (the CC-BY-NC-SA license). The issuance of this license is irrevocable, meaning that any contribution you provide to us is made open, accessible, and free forever.

Who can contribute?

Anybody, though all contributions are evaluated and assessed for accuracy and quality prior to being pushed to the live website, or to an AI training dataset.

How do I contribute?

Email policademyorg@gmail.com, or DM one of our posters. Simply say that you're interested in contributing. If you have a gmail account, please (1) create a Google account through Policademy and (2) note the address of said email.
